- The ideal of every human being is to be a real person. We possess by nature the factors out of which personality can be made, and to organise them into effective personal life is every man's primary responsibility. To be sure the word "Personality" has many meanings. When Daniel Webster walked down state street in Boston, business was temporarily suspended while people rushed to the doors and windows to see him pass. Similarly, when Jawaharlal Nehru addressed a public meeting in New York, people closed their shops and cancelled their engagements and crowded to the Municipal Park in large numbers. Such impressiveness or the ability to attract others and win their esteem is, in common parlance, called personality. Undoubtedly, this is a priceless gift and worthy trying for, but to consider its achievement man's main business in life will be Preposterous.
