Alphonso at once jumped off his horse and went to the assistance of the mule-driver. The two of them, King and mule-driver, pulled and pushed, encouraged the mule to struggle himself, until finally they succeeded in getting the mule on to firm ground. Both of them were covered with mud. By the time they had finished pulling the animal out, a number of people had collected by this time, and as people do, they stood by, watching. Then someone recognized the King. Word went round that this was King Alphonso. When the mule-driver heard that his helper was the King, he was very frightened. He turned to Alphonso and begged his pardon for asking him to help in such an unpleasant task. But Alphonso told him there was nothing for which to beg his pardon. He was a man although he was the king and man should be ready to help those in difficulty. King Alphonso had put to shame all those passers-by who would not help, and had set an example of neighborliness.
